THE BRIDGE QUESTION.

Reply to an Imbroglio of the Mayor's Official Opinion. The article in last Monday's issue about the visit of Mayor Hendricks and his pet councilmen to Newark and Jersey City, has caused a good deal of consternation hereabouts, and has also aroused the wrath of the mayor and his organ, the Leader. In an editorial, they deem that the writer of the article should have been called down, and if no one had a right to question the actions of public officers, when facts and figures are correct and copied from their own report of the proceedings.

The Leader for Feb. 28 reads thus: "Only two bids for the Melan Arch bridges were at hand. When read by the city clerk they were found to be slightly higher than for the steel structures, which had not been expected." These are the bids, as given by the Leader:

Table with 2 columns: Bidder Name and Amount. Includes Clark & Co., New York concrete, $1,200,000; Oswego Bridge company, steel, $1,017,000; Clark & Co., steel, $1,017,000; Clark & Co., steel, $1,017,000.

Further, as to the figures of the contracts, we read "that it is not certain that all the bridges can be built. The bids last night exceeded expectations, since only $14,000 had been appropriated for them in the new issue" of $25,000. Now where does the perversion of facts and figures come in? If accuracy is called in question, mark the Leader's sample of it in referring to Clark & Co.'s bid for the entire contract, of which called, it said, "for $30,000." The actions of the mayor in this episode speak louder than words. If he acted in good faith, therefore, his great anxiety to carry through the bids on the Melan bridges? Why his readiness to cut on their bonds? Wherefore his continued proceedings of Mr. Baker, the proposer of the resolution? And what meant his frequent reference to the agent of the company?

FAKE CONFESSIONS.

Notes That Lead Men to Admit Crimes They Didn't Commit. From the New York Sun. "The hardest men the police have to deal with," said a police official to a reporter, "are those who confess to crimes they did not commit; and they are not scarce either. Here was an instance the other day, this fellow Mason, who told of his plan to rob a bank in Newtonville, Mass. Of course he lied, although he did tell the circumstances of the robbery in Newtonville all right. He lived in Boston when the robbery occurred, and the papers were full of it. His confession fitted the circumstances of the case as printed in the papers. I fooled the captain with his stories. I mean Captain O'Brien. I don't want to reflect on the captain, but the facts, the fake confession, people fool him more than they do a good many others.

You want to know why men confess to crimes they have not committed? Well, there are several reasons. Sometimes they want to be sent home by the police. They know there is no chance of their being convicted when they get home, and it's an easy way to get home. Others are young men who are ambitious to get a reputation as big crooks. These are the fellows who strike in the large cities, where the newspapers have large general circulation. They confess to the chief, and the chief tells the story to the newspapers. It goes all over the world. It takes four or five days to find out that they are not telling the truth, and the chief is found out the fact is seldom printed, because the chief who received the credit for getting the confession don't want to lose it, and if he does tell the newspapers they dismiss it with a paragraph. Now, just why a man should be ambitious for a reputation as a professional criminal I can't say, but some people have queer ambitions. Another reason men have for confessing to crimes that they did not commit is desire to shield the real criminal long enough for him to make good his escape. Women are more apt to do this than men. Confessing that you committed a crime of which you are not guilty is pretty safe, anyway. The law everywhere is that a person cannot be convicted on an informal confession. There must be corroborating evidence, and besides that the man who says he did, but didn't, can nearly always prove a good deal.

RAILROAD NOTES.

The east bound shipments from Chicago last week were 90,572 tons, against 87,892 tons the previous week and 82,875 tons the corresponding week last year. Of the total, Michigan Central carried 8,655 tons, Wabash 6,540, Lake Shore 13,132, Port Wayne 9,276, Pan Handle 9,754, Baltimore and Western 10,400, Grand Trunk 11,030, Nickel Plate, 6,246, Chicago and Erie 14,358 and the Big Four 4,430 tons.

Vice-President Thomas M. King, of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company, has been appointed receiver of the Pittsburg and Western railroad, which is controlled by the Baltimore and Ohio. The receivership will not affect the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern nor the Station Island Rapid Transit companies, both of which are also controlled by the Baltimore and Ohio.

Messrs. Cowen and Murray have been appointed receivers of the company's property in New York state. It is stated that the receivers will employ surplus earnings in the general overhauling of the rolling stock. They are intended to cut down expenses as much as possible, and it is understood that every employee not actually needed will be relieved of his position. It is not intended, however, to curtail the service of the company. On the contrary, it will be improved as much as possible. Railroad men and financiers believe that a fatal mistake was made when the Baltimore and Ohio disposed of the Virginia Midland Railroad company, and began extending north to Baltimore. The Virginia Midland was transferred to the Richmond and Danville system, now the Southern Railway company, in 1886. It completed 413 miles of road and cost $10,000,000 from a point near Washington to Charlotte, N. C. The sale of this line is considered to have been the beginning of the decline of the Baltimore and Ohio. It has since destroyed the southern business of the company. After disposing of this property, Mr. Garrett began building a road from Baltimore to Washington, which would cost millions of dollars in the shape of additional indebtedness and imposing fixed charges upon the parent corporation, which for several years has been a heavy burden to the Baltimore and Ohio. The Baltimore and Ohio is now in a position to be reorganized, and it is understood that the Baltimore and Ohio will probably be done, but there is more
